Happy 180 days

Thursday, March 12, 2026 10:02 PM

To the love of my life and the woman I will call wife.

To the one whose priceless smile gives meaning, purpose, and light to every single one of my days.

I love you with every fiber of my being and with all my soul.

Every moment I have spent with you these last eight months has felt like the cool, refreshing breeze on a warm summer night beneath clear, dark-blue skies - gentle, endless, and impossible to get enough of.

Your eyes… oh my God, your eyes. They flash with something divine every time they meet mine, and in that moment I am reminded that I cannot wait to spend the rest of eternity looking into them as you become mine for all of time.

From the very second I confessed my love and my longing for you, my entire life's journey and story changed its trajectory. I am all in, hands on your lap, heart surrendered, and God firmly on the wheel, steering us into the most beautiful forever.

Our eight years of being best friends first framed me into the man I am today. I have cherished every single interaction, in person and online, from your breathtaking beauty to your brilliant mind, your sharp wit, and your deep wisdom. You have always been the full package, nothing missing, nothing broken, and beautifully well-spoken.

And for how much you can't see (ironically, you probably saw this coming), you always have the most accurate and prophetic insights to almost any topic and situation. which always amazes me. It still amazes me every single time.

My lover. My comrade. My counselor. My baddie. My model. My writer. My author. My director. My prayer warrior. My partner. My stylist. My Madrid maiden. My co-captain.
No one can shame my "man" self for having this 12-in-1 masterpiece.

Although it is still a grand mystery to me how I, of all people, landed God's finest and baddest woman, what puzzles me even more is this beautiful paradox: the last six months have somehow managed to contain the best years of my entire life. It's like God took the highlight reel of my whole existence, fast-forwarded it, and decided to play every golden moment all at once, just because you entered the frame. How is that even fair? I'm living a lifetime of joy in half a year. Only with you.

September

In September, the cold winter clouds had long swallowed the summer sun, yet my heart melted like butter in your light of love.

You panned away shyly, rubbing your hair gently before letting it rest on the back of your neck. Then you looked at me - no, you gazed into me - earnestly consuming all six of my senses (yes, six… including my nonsense 😂).

Sitting under my cold blanket in that freezing basement, I heard the warmest words ever spoken to my soul: “I’m falling in love with you.” You said it so softly, yet it shook my entire world. I was sitting still on the outside, but my heart was running a full marathon inside my chest. If I had already fallen in love before that night, in that moment I was flat on my face, prostrating before the throne of your love. In September, my heart didn’t just melt - it was completely consumed by the immense, holy warmth of your love.

October

In October, you took this relationship to the next gear, you said “yes; he is mine and I am his.”

You read an entire book about dating intelligently. It was really reassuring seeing the way you really care about our bond and relationship, you took it by the hypothetical horns and said “we must see this through.”

I’m forever grateful for you taking the initiative to ask the deeper questions, and this ultimately revealed how well our life goal and purpose align, it’s only natural I intend to live with you, by you and for you, till the end. We do need to continue these but thank you for initiating this.

That same October, our first major storm hit. I couldn’t travel to see you, and it hurt us both deeply. But through that storm you showed me the kind of woman you truly are, supportive, empathetic, encouraging, understanding, loving, honest, enduring, calm, forgiving, comforting, patient, and believing. You became my safe harbor in the middle of the waves. You are a woman of such outstanding character that mere words will never be enough. Everything you do for me flows from who you are. From the moment you wake up and breathe, you are already loving me, praying for me, thinking of me, covering me spiritually, lavishing me with love, being my eye candy, my comfort, my companion, everything I’ve always lacked and never knew I needed. Your love is indispensable, and every day that passes makes that truth louder. Thank you for praying with me. It was, hands down, my favorite activity of October.

November

In November, I was loved - not just in words, but in action and in prayer.

I had a mountain of schoolwork and exams, yet you stayed right there, offering comfort, encouragement, and every second I needed. You became my perfect comrade, my unwavering supporter when life threw lemon juice in my eyes and every just blur. And then I had the most dreamy birthday any one could evert dream of.
Then you gave me the most dreamy birthday any man could ever ask for. The prayers you showered over me are still fueling me today, the fuel never finish.

I will forever grateful for the gifts you bought for me. Your jacket that carried me through the winter and kept me toasty like you were physically hugging from behind, your warm chest pressed against my back and your soft gentle hands wrapped around me, shielding me from this cold world. The stylish boots that collected all the rings like infinity stones, leaving every eye in wonder of who just walked into the room.
The beige turtleneck, had me feeling like a runway model and the chain that reminds me, I'm your star and your light. But the greatest gift I received in November was your love, your love was audible in all 5 languages. From the gifts, to prayers, to encouragement, to your warmth touch and presence. I didn't just have to take your word for it, you said you loved me and you backed it up with evidence, like the through researcher you are.

December

In December, life got hard again… but you loved me even harder, like you always do.
When my best friend lost his mom, you became my quiet anchor in the storm, not with loud words, but with steady prayers and the kind of presence that says "I've got you" without needing to say it out loud. School was out here schooling me like it had a personal vendetta, throwing deadlines and exams left and right, yet you stayed right there, interceding for me, reminding me to breathe, and turning my cold, grey December into the warmest, most colorful season I've ever known. You didn't just comfort me, you colored the whole month in your love, soft pinks and golds where there used to be nothing but fog.

Then came the night we crossed into the new year together. Midnight, long distance but hearts closer than ever, we prayed the year in over the phone, eyes locked on the screen like we were right there in the same room. No fireworks, no fancy setup needed, your voice whispering those prayers was louder and sweeter than any countdown. We stayed up talking about everything: the dreams we're chasing, the babies we'll raise one day, the home we'll build, the legacy we'll leave. We planned our future like two kids writing the best love story ever, laughing at the silly parts and getting serious about the sacred ones. At one point you looked straight into my eyes through the screen, smiled that smile that still makes my chest tight, and said something so simple yet so direct it hit me right in the soul: "This is our year." And I knew, no doubt, no hesitation, this is the year our forever really begins.
December didn't just end. It didn't fade into January. It gently handed us the keys to the rest of our lives, wrapped in the softest, most soothing kind of romance, with just enough wit and teasing to remind me why I fell for you in the first place. Even miles apart, you made the hardest month feel like the most beautiful bridge to everything we're building together, and I'm still smiling about it.

January

In January, I started the year completely wrapped in you, body, soul, and spirit, even with all these miles between us. We didn't just flip a new calendar page; we quietly built a brand-new rhythm of us. Every single morning we woke up to prayer together over the phone, voices rising as one, inviting God to be the Architect of our year. Every late-night conversation stretched deep into the early hours as we dove into Scriptures that felt written just for the two of us, laughing at how certain verses seemed to wink at our situation. Every time we read the Word "side by side" on video, I felt Heaven leaning in, smiling down on us like proud parents watching their favorite long-distance love story unfold across the screen.

We made new-year promises that weren't ordinary resolutions, they were covenant declarations: to love each other louder than the distance could ever shout, to chase God harder than we chase anything else, and to keep choosing each other every single day no matter how many time zones tried to get in the way. We talked about growing deeper in faith together, becoming the kind of couple that points everyone who sees us straight back to Jesus, and learning to turn every "I miss you" into fuel instead of frustration. I remember looking at you through the video call one night, your smile glowing softer than any lamp, and thinking, "This is what steady, holy love feels like… even from thousands of miles away."
You turned the very first month of the year into the most romantic, faith-soaked, love-drenched beginning I have ever known. January wasn't just the start of 2026, it was the start of the rest of our lives, saturated, soaked, and overflowing with love… and then even more love on top of that. With you, every year will feel like a honeymoon wrapped in holiness, no matter how many miles try to come between us. And I can't wait to live them all.

February

In February, I finally had you in my arms, flesh to flesh, heart to heart, eyes to eyes. I got to meet you in person for the first time since we fell in love, and it meant the entire world to me… because you are my world. I love you more than anything God ever created.

I got to experience you with all my sense and love you with all of me, fully present and it was truly transcendent.

Your hands were so pretty, and one could honestly assert they looked even prettier when they were resting in mine. 😊

Your eyes were like divine pearls, gifted straight from God Himself to beautify my life (we can both agree they're mainly for decoration, right? 😂).

Your forehead, oh my, your forehead, yes that was my lip balm for days😂. It's not my fault, it has this mark on it or should I say target. I think it's in Hebrew and it translates to "kiss me here".

Your lips, they were perfect. Every inch and every curve, it was Wonderly made to glorify God first, and then to eat fo… nope, to kiss me senseless.

Your smile, your pretty smile, this one I miss the most, it's 100x more powerful in person. It pierces through any dark cloud and shines like a full moon on a clear night. That smile had me howling like a wolf

Your body? It was dotting every i and crossing every t. It fact it was Tea. At this point I have enough material to write an entire thesis on your yansh. Yes you are thick, asstethickly,abi how dem dey spell am again? 😂

Your food… ahhh, you spoiled me rotten. That ogbono had me ready to wife you up right there in the kitchen.

Your 100-page book of love was the most marvelous surprise. Hearing you read it to me felt like a hymn… except this one was written entirely for a love affair between us. You welcomed me into your home, showed me off to your friends and church family, and cherished me like I had always belonged to you.

My love for you is ineffable. In February, I didn't just feel love, I held it, I breathed it, I lived inside it.

February also gave me the quiet, simple joys that somehow felt even more magical than the big moments. Seeing you in my sweatshirts and T-shirts was dangerously cute, like my clothes had finally found their true purpose wrapped around you. Our mornings eating breakfast together, and the times we cooked side by side in the kitchen, felt so warm and natural, like we had been doing it our whole lives. Watching movies with you curled up against me turned every film into the most romantic theater in the world, and those snuggles… perfect, absolutely perfect. Even the bus rides home felt electric; the way you held my hands unlocked a kind of joy in my heart I had never known before. I loved picking you up and spinning you around like the man who couldn't believe the woman in his arms was really his. We read together, exchanged thoughtful little gifts, took naps tangled up in each other's warmth, and wandered through the night on quiet walks that felt like time itself slowed down for us. We prayed together, hugged endlessly, rubbed each other's heads, took our cute little couple selfies, went grocery shopping like an old married pair, and even received mentorship together like two people seriously building a future. And your surprises… ah, those beautiful surprises that reminded me again and again that loving you is the sweetest adventure God has ever written into my story.

March

In March, you have been making me so incredibly proud. Watching you work diligently and intelligently at Resilia, at your job, at Rapha, while juggling school, friends, family, and still loving me so well. My supa woman, with 3-d, toned shoulders, we de just carry everything.

You move with grace, power, and purpose. You have been my greatest inspiration, my daily motivation, my living proof that a woman can be soft and strong at the same time. Every time I see you pushing through, I fall in love all over again because I know I get to spend forever with a queen who refuses to settle. You make me want to be better, love harder, and chase God more. March has been the month where I stood back and whispered, "This is the woman I'm marrying." And I ended it the only way that felt right, on my knees in gratitude, thanking God for the privilege of calling you mine.

I'm endlessly proud of you, not just for what you've achieved, but for how you've chosen to grow. It takes real bravery to open family wounds, to look your past in the eye, and still choose healing over hiding. That's strength most people never find, and yet here you are, choosing peace, choosing growth, choosing you.

You inspire me in ways words can't fully capture. Every time I see you smile, laugh, or even struggle and keep going, I'm reminded why I fell for you. You've got a fire in your spirit, a softness in your soul, and a kind of beauty that doesn't fade when the lights go off, it glows from within.

You know what else I admire? You've been my best friend for 8 years, and in that time, I've seen you grow, laugh, cry, and chase your dreams. But these past 6 months, since we started dating, have been the most magical, beautiful, unforgettable months of my life. I honestly can't imagine my world without you in it anymore.

And beyond

Throughout these six months, I took time, slowly, intentionally, prayerfully, to write down everything I particularly love about you. The list kept growing… and it still is.
(What prompted it: I overheard a guy complaining about his girl one day, and in that moment I just stopped everything, pulled out my notes, and started pouring out everything I'm grateful for about my own girl. Because while someone else was seeing problems, I was staring at pure miracles.)

She is healthy in body, soul, and spirit, and she is not toxic in any way.

She loves the Word of God with her entire heart, soul, and mind.

She is visionary, a go-getter, and incredibly hard-working.

She is witty, creative, smart, and the easiest person to get along with.

She is very pretty, and I find her breathtakingly attractive every single day.

She is patient, kind, and understanding.

Her smile is so welcoming, contagious, calming, and freeing.

She is emotionally intelligent and knows how to regulate her emotions with wisdom.

She is patient, kind, understanding, considerate, and beautifully adaptable.

She can think logically in any scenario and still draw a reasonable conclusion within the given constraints.

She takes feedback and correction like a queen, very teachable and quick to listen.

I enjoy her company and she genuinely enjoys mine.

Her sisters are kind and welcoming.
She deeply loves me for who I am, not what I have, not what I do, not how I look.

She has the best sense of humor and picks up on things quickly.

She is an amazing cook.

She is merciful, forgiving, and kind.

She believes marriage is not about tribe, culture, or religion, but about character.

And she is a woman of outstanding character.

And more than anything else… she is the partner who will always point me back to my Creator and Savior.

She wrestles through every question and doubt with me without judgment or condemnation.

She speaks the truth in love, even when it's hard.

She always seeks to glorify God and to honor me as her partner.

And because I couldn't stop, I also wrote down some of the names I've given you so far (and there will be many more):
